A: Your question is open ended, but in general when you run into a problem with software you have downloaded, you should start by going to the site where you downloaded the software from and asking the people who created it what their support options are. Besides, a program like UFCTool is most likely legal and legal software usually comes with instructions on how to use it. It can make any torrent file legal, so there is no reason to worry about it. If you are still concerned, you should use a program like Avast or Malwarebytes Anti-Malware which are both free to use. Both of them run as a service which will scan your PC every day. If anything unusual is found, it will stop using your computer and notify you so you can investigate. Q: Chrome remote debugging not working after Chrome Beta version 11 I have a strange problem. I have a new OVH server (I've added it to a previous question) and I'm trying to remote debugging a Chrome app. I've tried a few times and it always stops working after I download the new "stable" beta version of Chrome (11.0.696.15). I've set up the following debugging options on the server:

chrome.debugger.chromeRemoteDebug.port=9222 chrome.debugger.chromeLocalSocket.connect=192.168.50.101 The protocol is up and I even get the "press ctrl+p to attach" message on the server, but after pressing ctrl+p nothing happens. I've got the same problem with the previous 3 pre-release versions of Chrome (10.0.648.204, 10.0.648.22 and 10.0.648.24) and with Firefox 4 and 5. A new 2nd server is working with the stable version of Chrome (10.0.648.83) without any problem... So it's not an issues of servers. The only similar issue I've found is when I update the driver of my Windows 7 machine. This makes it clear that the Chrome app is able to connect to the server... But it doesn't make it working to debug it. Any idea? A: I am now answering my own question. There is a bug in the beta version of Chrome 11 which is preventing the "create a new connection" button on the "new 3da54e8ca3
